“Roof as Refuge”
by David Vanderhoff

Raychel would often open her bedroom window and just go out on the roof. The first few nights it happened, our parents discovered that she was gone, thought that she had run away, and called the police. Eventually Raychel was found on the roof, looking up at the stars. In this photo from 1986, I caught her sneaking out for an afternoon stroll and clicked the shot. When she noticed me taking the picture of her, she burst out laughing. Thankfully, she got back in before our father noticed what was going on.
